

Norm's Tip for this week

During my time as a driving Instructor, I have found some students rate of learning is very good and others don't learn as quickly as their friends. What you have to take into consideration is, that no two people think or gain experience, or learn at the same rate.

Let's talk about the Learners Permit test. Many of you do the test by using the VicRoads multiple choice questions. Some pass the test the first time, while others fail on numerous occasions. I will be very blunt and explicit.

Many learner drivers don't even study for this test and don't even pick up the rule book. There are numerous web sites to study from. Some learner drivers can't be bothered, so the failure rate is very high. This also reflects on their driving ability because many cannot understand how the road laws work.

Stand by for next week's valuable information.
